“I chose to study medicine at JCU because it has the best reputation for producing work-ready graduates and it has a strong focus on rural and remote health, which is the primary reason why I wanted to study medicine. What also sets JCU apart from a lot of other medical schools is that it has multiple rural placement experiences spread across the six years. It enables you to obtain all of your training, from start to finish, outside major metropolitan areas. I would recommend the JCU experience hands down. If you want to be a rural doctor, the university definitely puts you in the best position to take full advantage of all the training opportunities that you could possibly obtain to get there.”
